

THE PARK BANK'S TELLER

THIRTY-SIX THOUSAND DOLLARS
LOST BY THE BANK.

The Discovery that Astonished President Wright was the fact that the President's former teller's wife knowing his whereabouts.

Thomas Ellis, the first or paying teller of the Park National Bank, did not appear at the desk on the opening of the bank at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. His absence gave no uneasiness when first noted, as it was supposed by him to be due to some business matter. When he was crossing the river from his home in Williamsburg, The President, Mr. J. L. Worth waited until 10 o'clock for him, and then ordered the two assistant paying tellers to count the money and to hand it to his duty, Mr. J. H. Merrill, one of the assistants. The balance of the accounts were short $26,000. Mr. Wright, the cashier, thought that there must be a mistake and he recounted the money with the same result.

"I was dumfounded," said President Worth "when I was informed of the deficiency, and I sat down to write a message to be telegraphed
